Several Trump administration members have come to the rescue of embattled White House press secretary Sean Spicer, with one official promoting an article on Breitbart, another comparing the press to “censorship” and a third threatening to sue a reporter over a tweet. Sarah Huckabee Sanders, President Trump’s deputy press secretary, published an April 5 report on Breitbart titled “Why the media attacks are helping the Trump movement.” The report contained no new information, but the headline was intentionally misleading, as the bulk of the report was devoted to false claims from Spicer and other administration officials about the press covering up for jihadist terrorist attacks. Breitbart.com In an April 6 interview on “Fox and Friends,” Sanders claimed that the media was attempting to “silence” the White House. “The media attacks, the constant attacks and silencing from the media is frankly what unites the people that put President Trump in office,” Sanders said. Attorney General Jeff Sessions and White House chief strategist Steve Bannon have also responded to criticism from the press by equating reporters to propagandists and referring to their work as “fake news.” Sarah Huckabee Sanders’s boss, White House press secretary Sean Spicer, has made similar comparisons of the press to propaganda from the Nazis and the Soviet Union. (RELATED: Donald Trump Has A Lot Of Criticism For The Media. Here’s A List) Other officials also rely heavily on comparing press coverage to propaganda, including Press Secretary Sean Spicer in his recent allegations about jihadist terrorist attacks. Spicer’s most notable propaganda-like statement involved his initial response to a deadly attack on the Brussels airport that claimed the lives of at least 31 innocent people on March 22. In his opening remarks during a White House press briefing, Spicer claimed that the attacks that day were the work of “Islamic terrorists.” “We condemn in the strongest possible terms today’s terrorist attack in Paris,” Spicer said on March 22. “There are no words that properly express my sorrow and pain for the victims, but a wave of anger.” “The Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS), a radical terrorist organization, claimed responsibility for the attacks on a television station in France and in a concert hall in Belgium,” he added, later correcting himself to say “the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (

De novo assembly of Illumina sequences using the SOAPdenovo2 software. The short-read sequences of next generation sequencing (NGS) technologies present a great challenge for de novo assembly. The short length of sequencing reads and the various types of sequencing errors are the main causes of their high redundancy. In this study, SOAPdenovo2 was applied for de novo assembly of the sequence reads from the Jeonju and Gimje soil metagenomes. The data quality of the sequences was checked using the quality scores calculated with the SOAP tool. The assembly results were then evaluated using alignment and annotation tools such as BLAST, Gene Ontology, and KEGG. The results suggested that the assembly process with the average N50 and average length of 4,026 and 2,405 bp, respectively, performed better than the other methods. The combination of assembly and annotation techniques can provide more functionally- and biologically-revealing data to understand functional diversity and to identify the mechanisms of microbial communities associated with the Jeonju and Gimje soils.

MOSCOW (Reuters) - Russia's special forces have killed a top Islamic State militant who was responsible for the group's chemical weapons programme, Interfax news agency reported on Friday citing Russian Defence Ministry sources. Russian special forces have killed the chief of Islamic State's chemical weapons programme in southern Russia, Interfax news agency quoted sources in the Russian Defence Ministry as saying. REUTERS "The terrorist leader of the Islamic State's chemical weapons programme, an Azerbaijani citizen of Turkish origin, with the code name Abu-Bakr, has been eliminated near the Chechen town of Gudermes," the Defence Ministry reported the sources as saying. Interfax said the Islamic State leader was engaged in the construction of chemical weapons in Syria. In January, the Defence Ministry said Islamic State militants were searching for chemical weapons and were preparing a mechanism to detonate them in Russia. Since then, Russian forces have destroyed arms and equipment seized by Islamic State near the Iraqi border, Interfax reported. The Defence Ministry did not offer a confirmation of the report. It was not immediately possible to reach Abu-Bakr to comment on the report. Islamic State was banned as a terrorist organisation by the United Nations in 2015. (Reporting by Alisa Petukhova; Editing by Maria Tsvetkova) //
